Handy guidebook for the imperial warmachine KSAT series claw rickshaw figure 2.Q: Set short-form url as the document root Given that a website contains a folder named accounts, this folder has a sub-folder called profile. Now when a user goes to the website, he sees a page that simply says "Welcome to the Website". Now the problem is that the cgi script inside the profile folder has been configured to use a long url such as /profile/profile.cgi. However, when the user is viewing a page on the website, he clicks on a link or something and he gets redirected to the cgi script defined in the profile sub-folder. But this is not what I want. What I want to do is set the document root of the cgi script inside the profile folder to be the one defined in the website, so that when the cgi script tries to access an image or something, it will be able to access it. Is there a way to do this? A: You should use location headers to redirect the user from long paths to short ones. This will work for when the user is navigating directly to the cgi script by typing it into the address bar of the browser. You should also use relative paths to all the resources on your website and do not specify a full absolute path to the images or other resources. If you are using an IDE such as NetBeans, you can build the paths in it's environment settings and your paths will be relative to the current working directory of your app. For a number of years, the primarily-gastrointestinal ("GI") complications of total parenteral nutrition ("TPN") have been recognized. Many of these complications can be traced to the use of pure high molecular weight dextrose as the primary carbohydrate source, due in part to the effect that dextrose has on GI physiology. Dextrose can cause the rapid, large, and unpredictable fluctuations in blood glucose that are associated with irritable bowel syndrome ("IBS") and other GI disturbances. Lipid products and lipid emulsions, including dietary fat emulsions used to fortify nutritional solutions, have been used to prevent or treat some of the complications associated with TPN, as well as improve the compliance of patients receiving TPN.
